Guidelines on Learning Chinese for Non-Chinese Speaking Students

非華語生學習中文指引

- ▶ Build a habit of learning Chinese by reserving 45 minutes of Chinese learning time after school. The means of learning could take various forms.

- ▶ Read and use more Chinese with your child in daily life, such as watching Chinese cartoons or movies, learning about the Chinese names of the various facilities and signage near your home and reading Chinese recipes.

- ▶ Actively take part in the after-school Chinese learning programme and reading programme organized by the school.

- ▶ Make good use of various media to gain exposure to Chinese, such as listening to Chinese radio channels, listening to Chinese songs, watch the educational TV Programmes produced by the Education Bureau, browsing Chinese websites or learning online.

- ▶ Make time to read Chinese story books and listen to Chinese nursery songs with your child every day.

- ▶ If space allows, try to set up a reading corner for storing Chinese books to create a Chinese learning ambience at home.

- ▶ The key to learning Chinese is to listen more, speak more, read more and write more. To master the Chinese language, you should first learn an extensive amount of vocabularies, then practice writing simple sentences and paragraphs, and finally an essay. Through consistent practice, you will eventually see more progress in your Chinese proficiency.
